

utopia is truly perfect for all, there would be no conflict (which would make a pretty boring story). A dystopia, on the other hand, generally has wide-spread appeal to audiences because it plays upon our deepest fears - a loss of life, liberty, and happiness.

Characteristics of a Dystopian Society

- Propaganda replaces education and is used to control the citizens of society.
- Information, independent thought, and freedom are restricted.
- Citizens are perceived to be under constant surveillance.
- Citizens have a fear of the outside world.
- Citizens live in a dehumanized state.
- The natural world is banished and distrusted.
- Citizens conform to uniform expectations. Individuality and dissent are bad.

Types of Dystopian Controls

Most dystopian works present a world in which oppressive societal control and the illusion of a perfect society are maintained through one or more of the following types of controls:

- ❖ Corporate control: One or more large corporations control society through products, advertising, and/or the media. Examples include Minority Report, Running Man, and Continuum.
- ❖ Bureaucratic control: Society is controlled by a mindless bureaucracy through a tangle of red tape, relentless regulations, and power-hungry government officials. Examples: The Hunger Games, 1984, Brazil, Robocop, and Elysium
- ❖ Technological control: Society is controlled by technology—through computers, robots, and/or scientific means. Examples include The Matrix, The Terminator, and I, Robot.
- ❖ Philosophical/religious control: Society is controlled by philosophical or religious ideology often enforced through a dictatorship or theocratic government. Examples include Matched, and The Handmaid's Tale.

Traits of Dystopian fiction

Many films and works of literature featuring dystopian societies exhibit at least a few of the following traits:

- ❖ The society is an illusion of a perfect utopian world.
- ❖ A selectively told back story of a war, revolution, uprising, spike in overpopulation, natural disaster or some other climatic event which resulted in dramatic changes to society.
- ❖ A standard of living among the lower and middle class that is generally poorer than in the contemporary society. This is not always the case, however, in Brave New World and Equilibrium, people enjoy a much higher standard of living in exchange for the loss of intelligence and emotion respectively.
- ❖ A protagonist who questions the society. The dystopian protagonist often feels trapped and is struggling to escape; questions the existing social and political systems; believes or feels that something is terribly wrong with the society in which he or she lives; helps the audience recognize the negative aspects of the dystopian world through his or her perspective.
- ❖ Necessarily, if it is based on our world, a shift of emphasis of control to corporations, autocratic cliques or bureaucracies.
- ❖ Because dystopian literature takes place in the future, it often features technology more advanced than that of the contemporary society in which it was written.
- ❖ For the reader to engage with it, dystopian fiction typically has one other trait: familiarity. It is not enough to show people living in a society that seems pleasant. The society must have echoes of today, of the reader's own experience. If the reader can identify the patterns or trends that would lead to the dystopia, it becomes a more involving and effective experience. Authors can use a dystopia effectively to highlight their own concerns about societal trends.
